Lobbying Compliance FAQs for NY Nonprofit Organizations

Nonprofit organizations serving low-income communities in New York are affected by the legislative process in many ways. Their work can be enhanced or complicated by legislation and regulatory action governing their program services or the beneficiaries of those services. Their financial health and even continued existence can depend upon government grants and contracts to provide services.

Nonprofits that lobby in New York must pay attention to federal limits on lobbying activity and to federal, state and local lobbying disclosure requirements. The Internal Revenue Code limits the amount of lobbying a tax exempt organization can undertake consistent with its tax exempt status. Lobbying before Congress may require registration and reporting of that activity. Lobbying before the state legislature or City Council may trigger separate registration and disclosure obligations under the state or city lobbying laws. Lobbying activity may also be regulated by campaign finance laws.

These FAQs provide an introduction to the many ways that legislative advocacy by nonprofit organizations is regulated at the federal, state, and city level. They are intended for use by nonprofit managers and by attorneys who represent them but may not be familiar with this complex area. These FAQs do not attempt to exhaustively cover all of the particulars in this complex and changing area of the law. Lawyers Alliance staff are available to help qualifying nonprofits determine whether they need to register as a lobbyist and how to track and report their lobbying activities and comply with other legal obligations. Introduction

1. What is lobbying?

Lobbying is an attempt to influence legislation or other official government action. Regardless of whether an organization describes its activities as advocacy, community education or public policy, if it is trying to influence government action the organization should familiarize itself with applicable lobbying regulations.

The federal government, New York State and New York City have each enacted statutes and regulations that govern lobbying activity, and each has a different definition of what counts as lobbying. The FAQs below explain which activities must be reported to which regulator.

2. Can a nonprofit organization lobby?

Yes! Nonprofit organizations, including nonprofits with 501(c)(3) tax exempt status as a public charity, can lobby. The amount of permissible lobbying varies depending on an organization's tax exempt status. Organizations with 501(c)(3) status are subject to the most restrictive regulations on how much lobbying activity they can engage in. Other types of tax exempt organizations can engage in as much lobbying as is necessary or desirable to accomplish their tax exempt purpose. In order to ensure that their advocacy efforts are as effective as possible without jeopardizing their tax exempt status, 501(c)(3) organizations in particular should become familiar with how much lobbying is permissible under Internal Revenue Service (IRS) rules.

3. Which government bodies regulate lobbying by nonprofits?

The IRS limits how much lobbying 501(c)(3) organizations may undertake.

The other applicable regulatory bodies do not limit how much lobbying an organization can conduct but do require that lobbying activity be reported under certain circumstances. The Federal Lobbying Disclosure Act requires disclosure of federal lobbying activity to the Clerk of the House of Representatives and Secretary of the Senate; the NYS Lobbying Act requires disclosure of lobbying activity within New York State (including municipal and county level activity) to the Joint Commission on Public Ethics, and the NYC Lobbying Act requires disclosure of lobbying activity within NYC to the City Clerk's Lobbying Bureau.

Legislative advocacy may also be regulated as an election-related expenditure if it is conducted in the months before an election and if it mentions a public official who is a candidate in that election. The Federal Elections Commission, NYS Board of Elections, and NYC Campaign Finance Board all play a role in regulating such activity.

Internal Revenue Code Lobbying Regulation

4. What is the Internal Revenue Code definition of lobbying?

The Internal Revenue Code (IRC) defines lobbying as supporting or opposing the passage of "legislation." Lobbying may be performed by directly contacting legislators (direct lobbying), or by encouraging people outside the organization to contact legislators (grassroots lobbying). For IRC purposes, lobbying includes attempting to influence:

- laws: actions by Congress, state legislative bodies, local legislative authorities, as well as public votes regarding referenda, ballot initiatives, and constitutional amendments.¹
- judicial nominations: confirmation of a federal judicial nominee by the U.S. Senate, as "resolutions" or "similar items."²
- adoption of international law: proposals for the enactment or amendment of international law.³

The legislation in question must be specific. For example, a policy stance in support of eliminating hunger would not count as lobbying unless the organization is supporting or opposing specific laws that would affect hunger.

For IRS purposes, lobbying does not include an attempt to influence administrative rulemaking or other action, executive action not subject to federal or state legislative approval, and local actions by special bodies such as zoning or school boards. A number of other exceptions to the IRS' definition of lobbying are discussed in question 11 below.

5. What restrictions are placed on 501(c)(3) public charities?

Organizations with 501(c)(3) public charity status are prohibited from engaging in lobbying activity that would constitute a "substantial part" of their activities.⁴ If the IRS determines that lobbying constitutes a substantial part of an organization's activities, the organization may be subject to excise taxes, or it may lose its tax exempt status altogether.

A 501(c)(3) organization has a choice between two alternatives for determining whether it satisfies the "substantial part" test:

- Expenditures test: An organization can elect to have its lobbying activity measured solely on the basis of its lobbying expenditures.⁵ This is sometimes called "the 501(h) election." The amount of lobbying that the organization can undertake depends on how much the organization spends on its exempt purposes in a year:

Total Exempt Purpose Expenditures	Total Amount Organization Can Spend on Lobbying up to $500,000	20% of exempt purpose expenditures (up to $100,000 max)
$500,000 - $1 million	$100,000 plus 15% of excess over $500,000
$1 million - $1.5 million	$175,000 plus 10% of excess over $1 million
$1.5 million - $17 million	$225,000 plus 5% of excess over $1.5 million
Above $17 million	$1,000,000

An organization's total exempt purpose expenditures are all of an organization's expenditures except the cost of operating a separate fundraising unit, expenses incurred in operating an unrelated trade or business, or any amounts transferred to affiliate organizations that would cause the organization to remain below the permissible lobbying levels.⁶ Additionally, under the expenditures test, grassroots lobbying is limited to 25% of the organization's total lobbying allowance.

Any 501(c)(3) organization (other than churches and private foundations) may choose the expenditures test by filing IRS Form 5768.⁷ There is no charge for filing this form.

- Facts and circumstances test: If an organization does not file Form 5768, the organization will be subject to a facts and circumstances test. Under this test, the IRS looks at the organization's overall activities and may take into account resources other than financial expenditures.⁸ It is not entirely clear on what factors the IRS will consider in deciding when an organization's lobbying counts as "substantial" and exceeds the limit.

6. What happens if a 501(c)(3) organization exceeds the IRS lobbying limit?

If an organization has not opted to elect the expenditures test and the IRS determines that lobbying constitutes a "substantial part" of its activities, it will lose its tax exempt status, and it may not reapply for tax exempt status as a 501(c)(4) organization.

If an organization has elected to use the expenditures test and exceeds its lobbying expenditures allowance, it will owe the IRS excise taxes of 25% of the amount by which it exceeded the allowance.

If the organization exceeds its allowance by an average of 150% over a four-year period, even an electing organization risks revocation of its tax exempt status.

7. Should a 501(c)(3) organization engaged in lobbying always elect to use the expenditures test?

In most cases, yes. The expenditures test offers a clear and reliable way to calculate how much an organization can spend on lobbying before its tax exempt status is jeopardized. There is no evidence that taking the election increases the risk of an IRS audit of lobbying activity.

8. How are the IRS rules for 501(c)(4) organizations different?

The IRS does not limit how much lobbying a 501(c)(4) social welfare organization can conduct, so long as the lobbying activity furthers the organization's tax exempt purpose. However, keep in mind that a 501(c)(4) organization is not eligible to receive tax deductible donations and cannot engage in partisan political activity as its primary purpose.

9. What is the difference between grassroots and direct lobbying, and why does it matter?

It is important to understand the difference between grassroots and direct lobbying because the IRC limits on grassroots lobbying are lower than the overall lobbying limits for organizations that have taken the 501(h) election. Grassroots lobbying is limited to 25% of an organization's total lobbying allowance.

- Direct lobbying occurs when an individual designated and compensated by the organization attempts to influence legislation by communicating with legislative officials. In order for activity to count as direct lobbying, there must be:
 - a) specific legislation (pending or proposed), and
 - b) the organization must take a stand in support of or opposition to that specific legislation.

- Grassroots lobbying occurs when an organization encourages others to influence legislation by urging those outside the organization to engage in lobbying. In order for activity to count as grassroots lobbying:
 - a) there must be specific legislation (pending or proposed),
 - b) the organization must take a stand in support of or opposition to that specific legislation, and
 - c) the activity must include a “call to action,” in which the organization either: i) explicitly asks the public to contact legislators in order to influence the legislation, or ii) implicitly encourages them to do so by providing legislators’ names and/or contact information.

All three criteria must be met. For example, simply educating the public on the impact of proposed legislation will not count as grassroots lobbying unless the organization also asks the public to contact their legislators in an attempt to influence the legislation.

10. Are there special rules for membership organizations?

Yes, with respect to the distinction between grassroots and direct lobbying, in particular. Lobbying communications aimed at individuals who are bona fide members of an organization will be counted as direct lobbying expenses rather than grassroots lobbying expenses.⁹ This is especially helpful for organizations that come close to meeting the cap on grassroots lobbying but not their overall lobbying limit. In order for an individual to qualify as a bona fide member of an organization, he or she must pay dues or make a contribution of more than a nominal amount of time or money, or be one of a limited number of honorary members.¹⁰ An individual will not be considered to be a member if the individual has simply signed up for the organization’s email newsletter.

11. Are there exceptions to what must be counted as lobbying activity for IRS purposes?

Yes. In many cases, it is helpful to keep in mind the definition of lobbying: for an activity to count as lobbying, specific legislation must be identified, and the organization must take a stand in support of or opposition to that legislation. For grassroots lobbying to occur, there must also be a call to action. If the activity in question does not meet these requirements, it is likely that lobbying has not occurred. Below are examples of activity which are explicitly exempted from the IRS definition of lobbying:

- Nonpartisan analysis, study or research: To fall under this exemption, the analysis must be full and fair and must allow the public to decide whether to support or oppose the legislation. In addition, the analysis must be made available to a cross section of the population (e.g., posted on the web) or to a nonpartisan cross section of the applicable legislative body.¹¹
- Technical assistance to a governmental body: If a governmental or legislative body asks an organization to testify or provide information on a particular subject, that work will not count as lobbying so long as the organization receives a written invitation to provide input. A request from a single legislator will not qualify for this exemption.¹²
- Self-defense exception: Advocacy regarding legislation that would affect an organization’s existence does not count towards its lobbying limits. For example, a charter school could lobby without limitation regarding a bill that would disallow charter schools. Simply lobbying on budgetary issues is unlikely to qualify for this narrow exception to lobbying, however.¹³

The remaining exemptions set forth by the IRS are helpful as clarifications, but it is also clear that these activities are not lobbying based simply on the IRS' definition of lobbying:

- Non-legislative communications with governmental officials: Many nonprofits do and should interact with government agencies and officials, and those lines of communications should not be stifled. If the topic of the communication is not legislative in nature, or if the organization does not take a position on the legislation, these interactions are not lobbying.¹⁴
- Communications with members that do not include a call to action: An organization can inform its members about specific or proposed legislation and take a position on that legislation. That activity is not lobbying unless it also includes a call to action.¹⁵
- Communication on issues: Examinations of broad social, economic or similar problems are not lobbying, even if they are directed toward the general public, if there is no call to action.¹⁶

12. How should an organization using the expenditures test count an “advocacy day” at City Hall or in Albany?

Because the goal of an “advocacy day” usually includes influencing legislation, any expenses with the event should be counted, including staff time and any expenses such as food and buses for staff and volunteers. Assuming an organization does not compensate volunteers, volunteer time does not need to be reported by an organization using the expenditures test.

To the extent the advocacy day has other goals, a portion of the expense may be allocated to something other than lobbying. For example, if children are involved, and the trip is also intended to serve an educational purpose (e.g., includes a tour of City Hall and a lecture on how laws are passed), some of the cost of the advocacy day may be allocated to educational activities rather than lobbying if the children are not asked to contact their legislators in order to influence legislation.

If the expense of an advocacy day is problematic because the organization is running up against the IRS limits on how much it may spend on grassroots lobbying, the organization should consider whether participants in the advocacy day are members for IRS purposes, in which case expenses related to those members' activities would be considered direct rather than grassroots expenses.

13. How are an organization's lobbying activities reported to the IRS?

An organization's lobbying activities are reported on Schedule C of the IRS Form 990 or 990-EZ. Organizations that have elected to use the expenditure test are required to report only the monetary value of their activities, while organizations that have not taken the election must provide more information about the activities.¹⁷

Organizations that lobby should implement consistent and reliable protocols to collect information about their lobbying expenses, both in order to comply with the 990 disclosure requirements and to facilitate accurate reporting to the federal, state and city regulatory bodies described below. The organization should maintain employee time records, receipts for expenses, and other documentation that would be helpful in supporting the organization's statements regarding lobbying activity.

Federal Lobbying Disclosure Act Regulations

14. Who must register and report under the Lobbying Disclosure Act?

The Lobbying Disclosure Act (“LDA”) covers lobbying at the federal level only; state and city level lobbying are not reported under the LDA. Only organizations that meet the following thresholds are required to register and report their lobbying activity under the LDA:

- the organization’s lobbyist has made at least two lobbying contacts and has spent at least 20% of his or her time on lobbying activity in a quarterly period; and
- the organization employing the lobbyist spent at least $14,000 on lobbying during that quarterly period.¹⁸

If one or both of these criteria are not met, the organization does not need to register and report under the LDA, even if it engages in lobbying at the federal level.

15. What must be reported under the LDA?

Assuming the thresholds above are met, attempting to influence federal legislation, regulations, agency action (including procurements), or Senate confirmations (and nominations for such confirmations) must be reported if lobbying is directed at any of the following:

Executive Branch

- President
- Vice President
- Officers and employees of the Executive Office
- Any official serving in an Executive Level I through V position: These are Cabinet members and certain other senior level officials¹⁹
- Any member of the uniformed services serving at grade O-7 or above
- Schedule C Employees: These tend to be people whose job involves making or approving substantive policy recommendations and their aides²⁰

Legislative Branch

- A member of Congress
- An elected officer of either the House or the Senate (such as the Clerk or chaplain)
- An employee who works for a legislator, committee, or working group or caucus of the legislature

Lobbying includes contacting these individuals in order to influence legislation, and “any efforts in support of such contacts, including preparation or planning activities, research and other background work that is intended, at the time of its preparation, for use in contacts and coordination with the lobbying activities of others.”²¹

16. What are the primary differences between the IRS and LDA definitions of lobbying?

The LDA counts influencing regulations as lobbying, while the IRS counts influencing legislation, confirmation of judicial nominees, and international law. The LDA counts activity targeted at federal legislators and certain federal officials, while the IRS counts activity targeted at legislators at any level of government.

However, a 501(c)(3) organization has the option of using the IRS' definition of lobbying when it fills out its LDA reports.²² This would simplify the organization's record keeping, but it may result in the organization reporting more activity than it must under the LDA.

17. What is the registration process for LDA lobbying reports?

Registration is required within 45 days of meeting the LDA registration thresholds and must be performed electronically using prescribed software.²³ Quarterly reports describing the organization's lobbying activity are due within 20 days after the end of each quarter beginning in January, April, July and October. Reports must be filed with the Clerk of the House of Representatives and Secretary of the Senate.

New York State and City Lobbying Regulations

18. How are City and State lobbying regulations different than IRS regulations on lobbying?

Two main differences stand out. First, NYC and NYS lobbying regulations do not limit how much lobbying an organization (or any other person or entity) may engage in. Instead, each requires registration and disclosure of lobbying activity, if a $5,000 expenditure threshold has been met.

Second, NYC and NYS have a broader definition of lobbying than the IRS does. In addition to attempting to influence legislation, the NYC and NYS definitions include attempting to influence administrative rules "having the force and effect of law," as well as procurements and certain other actions by government agencies, boards and commissions. As a result, advocacy that does not count towards the organization's IRS lobbying limits may still need to be reported to NYC and NYS.

19. Does NYC and NYS lobbying activity need to be counted towards an organization's Internal Revenue Code limit on lobbying?

Not necessarily. Because the NYS and NYC lobbying definitions include many activities that the IRS does not count as lobbying, some of the lobbying activity that must be reported to NYS and NYC will not count towards the IRC limits on lobbying.

20. What must be reported to NYS?

An organization must report all attempts to influence certain types of activities by state, county and municipal legislators and agency officials in New York State. Federal level lobbying activity is not included and does not count towards the $5,000 threshold.

Under the NYS Lobbying Act, lobbying is defined as attempting to influence:

- legislation (and the introduction of legislation) – budget legislation and discretionary funding included in the budget count!
- agency rules, regulations, actions having the force of law, procurement, and ratemaking

- approval or veto of any legislation by the governor
- Executive order by Governor or Mayor
- tribal-state agreements.²⁴

21. What must be reported to NYC?

Only work aimed at the NYC government must be reported to NYC. State and federal level lobbying activity should not be included and do not count towards NYC's $5,000 threshold.

Under the NYC Lobbying Act, lobbying is defined as attempting to influence:²⁵

(i) City Council:

- the introduction, passage, defeat or substance of any local law or resolution by the City Council, or
- the calendaring or scope of any City Council oversight hearing;

(ii) Mayor:

- the support, opposition, approval or disapproval of any local law or resolution by the Mayor, even if the law or resolution has not yet been introduced,
- the issuance, repeal, modification or substance of a mayoral executive order;

(iii) Procurement: any determination made by an elected city official or an officer or employee of the city with respect to the procurement of goods, services or construction, including the preparation of contract specifications, or the solicitation, award or administration of a contract, or with respect to the solicitation, award or administration of a grant, loan, or agreement involving the disbursement of public monies;

(iv) Zoning or land use: any determination made by the Mayor, City Council, City Planning Commission, a borough president, a borough board or a community board with respect to zoning or the use, development or improvement of real property subject to city regulation;

(v) City's real property: any determination made by an elected city official or an officer or employee of the city with respect to the terms of the acquisition or disposition by the city of any interest in real property, with respect to a license or permit for the use of real property of or by the city, or with respect to a franchise, concession or revocable consent;

(vi) Agency: the proposal, adoption, amendment or rejection by an agency of any rule having the force and effect of law;

(vii) Ratemaking: the decision to hold, timing or outcome of any ratemaking proceeding before an agency;

(viii) Board or Commission: the agenda or any determination of a board or commission; or

(ix) State or federal legislation: any determination made by an elected city official or an officer or employee of the city to support or oppose any state or federal legislation, rule or regulation whether or not it has been formally introduced or proposed.

22. Do planning and preparation sessions for lobbying need to be reported?

In general, any work the organization does to prepare for public lobbying communications should be reported. This includes planning and strategy sessions and coordination meetings. It also includes work drafting legislation that does not yet exist, if the organization then pushes for the law to be enacted.

However, advocacy planning that does not involve specific or proposed legislation is not lobbying. For example, a meeting of coalition members to decide which policies to focus on for the year would not be lobbying until those policies are identified and the decision is made that the policy changes require legislative solutions.

23. What are the exceptions to the City/State definitions of lobbying?

There are numerous specific exceptions, which include:²⁶

- Drafting & opinions: Drafting, analyzing or offering an opinion on legislation is not lobbying so long as the person does not conduct other lobbying activity with respect to the legislation.
- Agency proceedings: Participation in the public proceedings of a government agency is not lobbying, with respect to participation that is part of the public record and preparation for such participation.
- Adjudication: Participation in an adjudicatory proceeding is not lobbying.
- Responding to a request for information: Responding to a request for information from a government official or government body is not lobbying. However, the activity will be considered lobbying if the informant:
 - a) volunteered more information than was sought in the request;
 - b) provided requested information in a manner that clearly attempted to influence the passage or defeat of legislation, rules, or regulations;
 - c) instigated the request from the government official; or
 - d) “otherwise engaged in lobbying” on the subject matter in question.²⁷
- Procurement: NYS and NYC each have specific rules about when contacts with legislators and agency officials must be reported as lobbying, which are discussed in greater detail below. In general, it is not lobbying to respond to an RFP or to participate in an officially sanctioned means of communication such as bidders conferences or questions submitted to a designated forum.

JCOPE’s regulations list additional exceptions, such as contacting the media with respect to news, communicating with a group of which a public official happens to be a member, or attending a meeting solely to give technical information or for educational purposes without playing a role in the lobbying strategy itself.²⁸

Keep in mind that in order for an activity to be defined as lobbying, it must refer to, and take a stand in opposition to or support of, specific legislation, rules or other desired action. NYS treats an appeal to the public as indirect (grassroots) lobbying only if it also includes a call to action: a request that the audience contact the relevant legislators or officials to support or oppose the legislation.²⁹ It is likely that NYC adheres to this approach as well.³⁰ Note that JCOPE rules also state that an appeal to the public is grassroots lobbying if it asks the audience to engage in grassroots lobbying.³¹ The constitutionality of this extension of the definition of grassroots lobbying has not yet been tested in the courts.

24. What if only part of a meeting or other activity involves lobbying?

Only that portion of a meeting or activity that is aimed at influencing government action needs to be reported. However, differentiating between the different portions of a particular meeting will require careful record keeping, as the organization should be able to justify the split between lobbying and non-lobbying activities by referring to its records.

25. Is every interaction with an elected official considered lobbying for NYS and NYC purposes?

No. In order for an activity to count as lobbying, it must involve an attempt to influence legislation, agency rules, or one of the other specific items discussed in response to questions 20 and 21 above. For this reason, educating government officials or discussing logistics of government-funded programs without an accompanying “ask” generally does not count as reportable lobbying.

26. Does an organization’s lobbying with volunteers need to be reported? What about board members?

In general, time spent by uncompensated volunteers does not need to be reported. NYS and NYC monitor the expenditures related to lobbying, and because volunteers are uncompensated, in most cases the organization will incur no reportable expenses.

However, there is an exception for board members of the organization that lobby at the NYS and NYC levels, even if those activities are uncompensated. NYS and NYC view board members as being designated lobbyists by the organization by virtue of their official role. As a result, board members’ activities must be reported if the organization is already registered. This is true even if the organization does not compensate the board member for that work.³² If the organization is not registered as a lobbyist, however, uncompensated lobbying by a board member need not be reported.

27. Does an appearance at a public hearing count as lobbying?

Testimony before the City Council or State legislature (and the preparation time for that testimony) is not considered lobbying if comes in response to an unsolicited invitation from a public official, legislative body or agency.³³ For NYC reporting purposes, the invitation can be made generally to members of the public; it is unclear whether this is true for state reporting.³⁴ Note, though, that if the person is testifying before a legislative committee, the testimony will count as lobbying for IRS purposes if the invitation comes from an individual legislator and not from the committee itself.

In most cases, testimony before a public agency (and the preparation time for that testimony) would not be reported to NYS or NYC as lobbying activity, even without an invitation to testify.³⁵

28. How should an organization report an “advocacy day” at City Hall or in Albany?

Because the goal of an “advocacy day” usually includes influencing legislation, staff time should be reported to NYS and NYC as lobbying. However, assuming an organization does not compensate volunteers, most volunteer time does not need to be reported (with the exceptions discussed in the answer to question 26 above).³⁶ Expenses for signs or t-shirts, food, lodging and transportation (such as buses) for volunteers, and for staff who are not registered lobbyists, must also be reported.³⁷ Unlike with the IRS lobbying limits, however, it is not necessary to report to either NYS or NYC regarding expenses for food, lodging and transportation for staff who are registered lobbyists.³⁸

29. Does a public rally count as lobbying?

A public rally may count as lobbying activity if an organization uses the rally to conduct grassroots lobbying (i.e., encouraging the public to take action in support of or opposition to a piece of legislation).

If those criteria are not met, and there is no direct contact with legislators at the rally, the rally will not count as lobbying.

30. Does seeking member item funding count as lobbying?

Because member items are designated in City and State budget legislation, contacting a legislator or government employee to influence the disbursement or award of member item money should be reported as lobbying. Likewise, it is reportable lobbying to attempt to persuade the legislature to include in the budget either funding for a particular type of program, or a particular level of funding.

31. Is every attempt to obtain government funding considered lobbying?

No. As a rule, responding to an RFP or participating in a formal process to apply for a grant or other type of funding is not considered lobbying.³⁹

However, NYS and NYC each have extremely specific rules about when contacts with elected officials or agency staff outside of a formal application process constitute lobbying.⁴⁰ An organization that clearly exceeds the state and city expenditure thresholds may want to report all such contacts as lobbying. For an organization that is unsure about whether it meets an expenditure threshold, it may be worth parsing these rules:

- An attempt to influence a contract between a nonprofit organization and a state agency generally is not considered procurement lobbying for NYS purposes if the funding stream is not open to for-profit entities. However, if the contract is a procurement contract, open to for-profit entities, then an attempt to influence it is considered lobbying for NYS purposes.⁴¹ A procurement contract includes a contract or agreement in excess of $15,000 regarding “a commodity, service, technology, public work, construction, revenue contract, the purchase, sale or lease of real property or an acquisition or granting of other interest in real property, that is the subject of a governmental procurement.”⁴²
- An attempt to obtain a county or local procurement contract is reportable lobbying for NYS purposes.⁴³
- An attempt to obtain a NYC procurement contract is also reportable lobbying for NYC purposes.⁴⁴
- An attempt by a nonprofit to obtain a grant is not reportable lobbying for NYS purposes.⁴⁵ However, an attempt to obtain a grant from a NYC agency may be reportable lobbying for NYC purposes.⁴⁶

Note that a registered lobbyist, but not a client, must file a separate, additional report if it anticipates spending $5,000/year or more to influence the disbursement of certain state funds. This requirement is discussed more fully in question 32 below.

32. In addition to the obligation to file lobbyist and client reports, what other requirements might apply to a lobbyist who attempts to obtain public funding?

- Disbursement of Public Monies Reports: A registered NYS lobbyist that anticipates expending in excess of $5,000 to influence the disbursement of certain state funds must file a NYS Lobbyist Disbursement of Public Monies Report. This report must be filed if the lobbyist attempts to influence the allocation of funding in excess of $15,000, where the state legislature has included that funding in the state budget without allocating it to a particular recipient.⁴⁷ This report does not need to be filed if the attempt involves either a member item that the budget directs to a particular organization or a procurement contract. Because NYS does not consider attempts to obtain certain types of government funding to be lobbying (as discussed above), some activity may need to be included on the Disbursement of Public Monies report even though it is not considered lobbying.

- Restricted Period: NYS imposes special restrictions on lobbying regarding NYS procurements. Most contracts between state agencies and nonprofit organizations are excluded from these requirements, as are grants.⁴⁸ For covered procurements, once an agency issues a request for proposals or other announcement inviting applications for funding, until the contract is awarded, registered lobbyists are restricted in whom they may contact to influence that funding. However, they are allowed to:
 - lobby the agency's designated contact;
 - respond to an RFP; or
 - participate in officially sanctioned means of communications such as bidders' conferences or questions submitted to a designated forum.

Failure to comply with the restricted period can result in penalties up to $50,000 and a ban on lobbying activity in NYS. The restricted period applies only to attempts to obtain NYS funding; it does not apply to attempts to obtain county or municipal funding.

33. What is the registration and reporting process for NYC and NYS lobbying compliance?

If an organization anticipates that it will meet or exceed the $5,000 threshold for registration at the State and/or City levels, it should register and report its lobbying activity:

- NYS: Register and report online to the New York Joint Commission on Public Ethics (<http://www.icope.ny.gov>).

An organization that employs the lobbyists itself can be both the client and the lobbyist (with employees who lobby listed as "additional lobbyists"). If such an organization does not employ outside lobbyists, it will be required to file lobbyist bi-monthly reports but will not have to file client semi-annual reports.⁴⁹

- NYC: Register and report online to the City Clerk (http://www.cityclerk.nyc.gov/html/lobbying/lobbying_bureau.shtml)
An organization that employs the lobbyists itself must register with the City Clerk as a lobbyist/client (requiring bi-monthly lobbyist reports but no client reports).⁵⁰ An organization that employs an outside lobbyist must enroll as a client with the City Clerk (requiring an annual report).

Please note: there is no minimum threshold for filing a lobbyist bi-monthly report under the NYS and NYC lobbying laws once an organization is registered. Even if no lobbying has occurred during a reporting period, a report MUST be filed.

34. What personal information must a registered lobbyist disclose?

Both NYS and NYC make lobbying reports available online, so anyone registered as a lobbyist under either system will be publicly identified as such. The person's lobbying expenditures and lobbying activities will be made public as well. In addition, home address and spouse or domestic partner must be reported to JCOPE and the City Clerk, although this information is not public. Unemancipated children must also be listed on the NYC registration forms if those children are making campaign contributions.

35. Can a registered lobbyist invite a public official to a fundraiser or give other types of gifts?

The general rule is that lobbyists may not give anything of more than nominal value to public officials.⁵¹ It is sometimes impermissible to give gifts to public officials' relatives, or for a lobbyist's relatives to give gifts to public officials.⁵² However, both NYS and NYC do permit certain types of gifts, including:

- complimentary tickets to an organization's charitable events,⁵³
- complimentary attendance at a conference widely attended by people other than public officials, so long as the event is related to the official's job;⁵⁴
- awards, plaques and other ceremonial items that are publicly presented;⁵⁵ and
- pens, t-shirts and the like that promote the organization and have little resale value.⁵⁶

36. Are there special requirements for registered lobbyists who are involved in or contribute to a political campaign?

Contributions by NYC-registered lobbyists to NYC political campaigns are not matched by the NYC Campaign Finance Board and are subject to lower contribution limits than other individuals. If the lobbyist is an organization, this includes contributions by the CEO, CFO and/or COO, and any person employed in a senior managerial capacity.⁵⁷

In addition, political fundraising and paid political consulting must be reported for all individuals who are registered as lobbyists with NYC, as well as for their unemancipated children and spouse or domestic partner. Political fundraising is defined as "solicitation or collection of contributions of a candidate" for NYC office, and would include house parties and sending emails to encourage others to donate to a candidate, even when that activity is voluntary and uncompensated.⁵⁸ Political consulting is only reportable if the individual receives compensation for the consulting. Registered lobbyists must report even those political fundraising and paid political consulting activities that they conduct in their private lives during off-work hours.

37. Must lobbying that a registered lobbyist performs on his or her own time be reported?

NYS may require a person listed as an additional lobbyist on one organization's registration to register and report regarding any lobbying he does on a volunteer basis for any other organization, even though an organization's uncompensated volunteers usually are not required to register as a lobbyist.⁵⁹

NYC does not require individuals employed by a registered lobbyist to report lobbying that they do on their own time, unless the individual spends or receives at least $5,000 in reportable compensation and expenses for the purpose of lobbying.⁶⁰

38. Must lobbying activities of family members living in the same household be reported?

Although the spouse or domestic partner of a registered lobbyist is listed for purposes of registration, that individual's lobbying activity (if any) does not need to be reported. However, if the spouse, domestic partner or unemancipated children engage in political fundraising or in paid political consulting, that activity must be reported.

39. How should an organization track its lobbying activity?

In order to file timely reports, an organization should put in place a system that captures the lobbying activity of all employees. These records must be turned in to the person who will be filing the reports with enough lead time for that person to process and input the necessary information and still comply with the filing deadline.

While the records of the organization need not be detailed time sheets, the records should be an accurate reflection of the organization's activities, and should include the following:

- subject, including bill number if applicable;
- target, including specific individuals (e.g., City Council members) if applicable;
- time spent;
- additional expenses (e.g., printing costs);
- level of legislation (i.e., federal, state or local); and
- grassroots or direct lobbying.

For organizations reporting under multiple systems (IRS, Federal Lobbying Disclosure Act, NYS and/or NYC), records should also reflect whether the activity is lobbying for IRS purposes (e.g., an attempt to influence administrative rulemaking is NOT considered lobbying for IRS purposes but must be reported for NYS and NYC purposes).

40. What are the penalties for failing to register or file a form, or for doing so late?

When an organization fails to register as a lobbyist in a timely fashion, or to file a report as a lobbyist or client, the City Clerk and JCOPE are authorized to charge first time filers up to $10/day, and to charge everyone else up to $25/day. However, JCOPE has adopted a late fee schedule that sets flat rates at a substantially lower level and has discretion to reduce or waive late fees in appropriate circumstances.⁶¹ The City Clerk has similar discretion to reduce or waive fees.⁶² Leniency is most likely to be exercised for newly registered organizations, organizations that lobby solely on their own behalf, and those with reasonable explanations for the late filings.

In most cases, the single most important factor for avoiding penalties is the timely filing of reports. However, NYC can impose penalties of up to $30,000 and NYS can impose penalties of up to $50,000 for knowing and willful violations of the applicable lobbying statute.

41. What if a lobbying report needs to be changed?

In general, there is no penalty for amending a lobbying report if an organization realizes that changes need to be made. However, it is possible that penalties could be assessed when a willful violation of the lobbying laws has occurred.

42. In addition to periodic lobbying reports, what other forms might a lobbyist or client be required to submit?

NYC-registered lobbyists may have to file a Fundraising/Political Consulting Report. NYS-registered lobbyists may have to file the Disbursement of Public Monies Report described in response to question 32 and/or the Reportable Business Relationship Form described in response to question 43. Clients of NYS-registered lobbyists may also have to file a Reportable Business Relationship Form.

43. What is the NYS Reportable Business Relationships requirement?

A NYS-registered lobbyist or client is required disclose information about certain types of business transactions with state elected officials and state employees. A transaction is covered if the lobbyist or client (or one of the client's directors or executive managers) pays the state official or employee $1,000 or more in a single twelve-month period for goods, services or anything of value. The transaction is also covered if the compensation is provided to an entity in which the state official or employee has a significant interest, or if it is provided to a third party at the direction of either the state official or employee or an entity in which the state official or employee has a significant interest.⁶³

Lobbyists must disclose reportable business relationships at the time of their biennial registrations; clients must do so at the time of their semi-annual reports. Both lobbyists and clients must update that information whenever they enter into or learn of a new reportable business relationship. JCOPE's website provides a questionnaire that nonprofits can use to determine whether their directors or executive managers are engaged in any transactions that must be reported.⁶⁴

44. What is the NYS Source of Funding requirement for 501(c)(4) organizations?

If a NYS-registered lobbyist whose lobbying activity is performed on its own behalf, or a client of a registered lobbyist, engages in a substantial amount of lobbying in New York State, it must disclose each source of funding over $2,500 used for such lobbying.⁶⁵ This requirement does not apply to 501(c)(3) organizations. However, a 501(c)(4) organization is covered if it has spent at least $15,000 and 3% of its total expenditures in the last year on lobbying in New York. Disclosure is not required if JCOPE determines that reporting may harm the person or organization that provided the funding. Source of funding information is reported on the client Semi-Annual Report.

45. How are 501(c)(3) organizations affected by the NYS Source of Funding requirement?

When a 501(c)(4) is covered by the NYS Source of Funding requirement, any 501(c)(3) organization that makes an in-kind contribution to the 501(c)(4) worth $10,000 or more will be required to file a report with the NY Department of State. That report will include the identity of the recipient 501(c)(4), the people who exert managerial control over the 501(c)(3), the date and amount of contributions to the 501(c)(4), any restrictions that the 501(c)(3) has placed on the contributions, and a list of the 501(c)(3)'s major donors.⁶⁶

Legislative Advocacy Regulated as an Election-Related Communication

46. Why do nonpartisan organizations engaged in legislative advocacy need to be aware of independent expenditure disclosure requirements?

Legislative advocacy may be regulated as an election-related expenditure if it is conducted in the months before an election and if it mentions a public official who is a candidate in that election. Such communications are sometimes called “independent expenditures” and sometimes called “electioneering.” Nonpartisan nonprofits need to be aware of these regulations, because some of the regulations extend to communications that do not support or oppose the candidate, and that refer to the individual in a capacity other than as a candidate.

In addition to legislative advocacy, many of the independent expenditure regulations discussed in this section cover advocacy that explicitly supports or opposes a candidate or ballot proposal. Those requirements are beyond the scope of this document and are not discussed here.

47. Which legislative advocacy communications must be reported to the Federal Elections Commission?

The Federal Elections Commission Act defines “electioneering” as a communication issued in the month or two prior to a federal election, in a broadcast, cable or satellite communication, which includes the name of a clearly identified candidate for a federal election and is targeted to the relevant electorate.⁶⁷ A communication is covered even if it does not support or oppose the candidate, and even if it refers to the individual in a capacity other than as a candidate. An entity that issues “electioneering” communications that in the aggregate cost more than $10,000 must report to the Federal Elections Commission within 24 hours of when the communication is made.⁶⁸ This requirement applies to 501(c)(3) organizations, as well as to all other types of organizations.

48. Which legislative advocacy communications must be reported to the state Board of Elections?

In some circumstances, a legislative advocacy communication may be deemed an “independent expenditure” that must be reported to the Board of Elections.⁶⁹ A communication will be deemed to be an independent expenditure if it mentions someone who is running for state or local office, is distributed to 500 or more members of the general public via a method of communication other than the internet (or to 50 or more people via paid digital advertising), and meets one of the following three criteria:

a) at any time the communication contains words such as “vote” “oppose,” “support,” “elect,” “defeat,” or “reject,” which call for the election or defeat of the candidate.

This provision applies to 501(c)(3) organizations and all other types of entities. However, it is unlikely that a 501(c)(3) nonprofit will issue this type of communication, because they are prohibited from doing so by the Internal Revenue Code.

b) during the calendar year in which an election will be held the communication advocates for or against the candidate. To determine whether a communication falls into this category the Board of Elections will examine the following factors:

- Whether the communication identifies a particular candidate by name or other means such as party affiliation or distinctive features of a candidate’s platform or biography;
- Whether it expresses approval or disapproval for said candidate’s positions or actions;

- Whether it is part of an ongoing series by the group on the same issue and the series is not timed to an election;
- Has the issue raised in the communication been raised as a distinguishing characteristic amongst the candidates; and
- Whether its timing and the identification of the candidate are related to a non-electoral event (e.g. a vote on legislation or a position on legislation by an officeholder who is also a candidate).⁷⁰

This provision applies to 501(c)(3) organizations and all other types of entities.

c) a month or two prior to an election the communication references the candidate, even if the communication is completely unrelated to the election.

This provision does not apply to 501(c)(3) organizations but does apply to other types of nonprofits.

An organization that makes an independent expenditure must first register as a “political committee” with the Board of Elections and then comply with the Board’s requirements regarding reporting, attribution and contributions.⁷¹

49. Which legislative advocacy communications must be reported to the NYC Campaign Finance Board?

The NYC Campaign Finance Board definition of “electioneering” includes a communication that refers to one or more clearly identified candidates in a NYC election within 30 days before a primary or special election or 60 days before a general election, and that is communicated via paid or unpaid radio, television, cable or satellite broadcast, mailing 500 copies, or any form of paid advertisement. A communication is covered even if it does not support or oppose the candidate, and even if it refers to the individual in a capacity other than as a candidate. However, 501(c)(3) organizations are exempt from the reporting requirement.

If an organization spends $1,000 or more on electioneering communications, that organization must comply with the Campaign Finance Board’s rules regarding reporting and attribution.⁷²
